--This publication states that approximately 20 different pharmaceutical products have been studied for the purpose of finding an effective pharmacological treatment for cocaine dependency, although there is still no truly effective treatment available. The most promising results seem to have been obtained with desipramine and amantadine although there are studies that could not confirm the positive expectations created, possibly due to differences in the cocaine addict population and the route of administration of the drug. Other pharmaceuticals tested have been carbamazepine, pergolide, carbidopa/L-dopa, fluoxetine, ~~flupenthixol~~ [sic? ~~flupenthixol~~] flupenthixol, bupropion, maprotiline, phenelzine, buprenorphine, and methadone.--
